Reflections from the Edge

I look for the abstract, the surreal… unique ways to photograph the progression of the seasons along the edge of a pond in Eastern Kentucky. I grew up on a tobacco farm in rural Appalachia Kentucky. Since my family lived close to the land and depended on it for our livelihood, I acquired an intimate knowledge and appreciation of the workings of nature. Life was a continual celebration of hard work and observing and exploring in my world of the mountains.

My curious nature directed me to exotic locales such as the Northern mountains of Peace Corps Thailand, months of trekking the high mountain ranges of Nepal… one step at a time…, inner searches of the mind through Buddhist temples of India, and many years working with troubled teens on the Plains of the Upper Great Basin in the West.

Years of open skies, far horizons, and exotic cultures eventually led me full circle back to Appalachia – in a different light. Every place and season seemed unique and special. With the purchase of a camera I rekindled an old hobby that had developed in my early days of exploration.

At first it was fun rediscovering my old stomping grounds and taking a few nice photographs along the way. Yet the photography quickly grew into a passion to capture the natural beauty of Eastern Kentucky. The more I worked on photographing these rugged hills, hollers, sunsets and sunrises the more I got caught up in the excitement of presenting this beauty to other people. As I chased the light I traveled farther and deeper in the Appalachians.
